Royal Palace/small courtyard

Clearly visible, the modern dome spanning the historical courtyard was designed by Peter Kulka Architecture. The covering literally caps years of comprehensive reconstruction that has restored the historical columned arcades and gables to ensure the 16th century Renaissance courtyard can be enjoyed by many generations to come. After being open to the weather for centuries, the transparent membrane not only now protects the quaint area from the elements, it also makes gatherings there possible regardless of season. The dome and surrounding construction consists of a self-supporting lattice over which clear plastic elements are stretched and held under pressure. The crest of the dome is around nine metres high. The innovative cover has converted the courtyard into a room that can be used as a central foyer during the day and an event space at night.
